

MC Specialty Planners

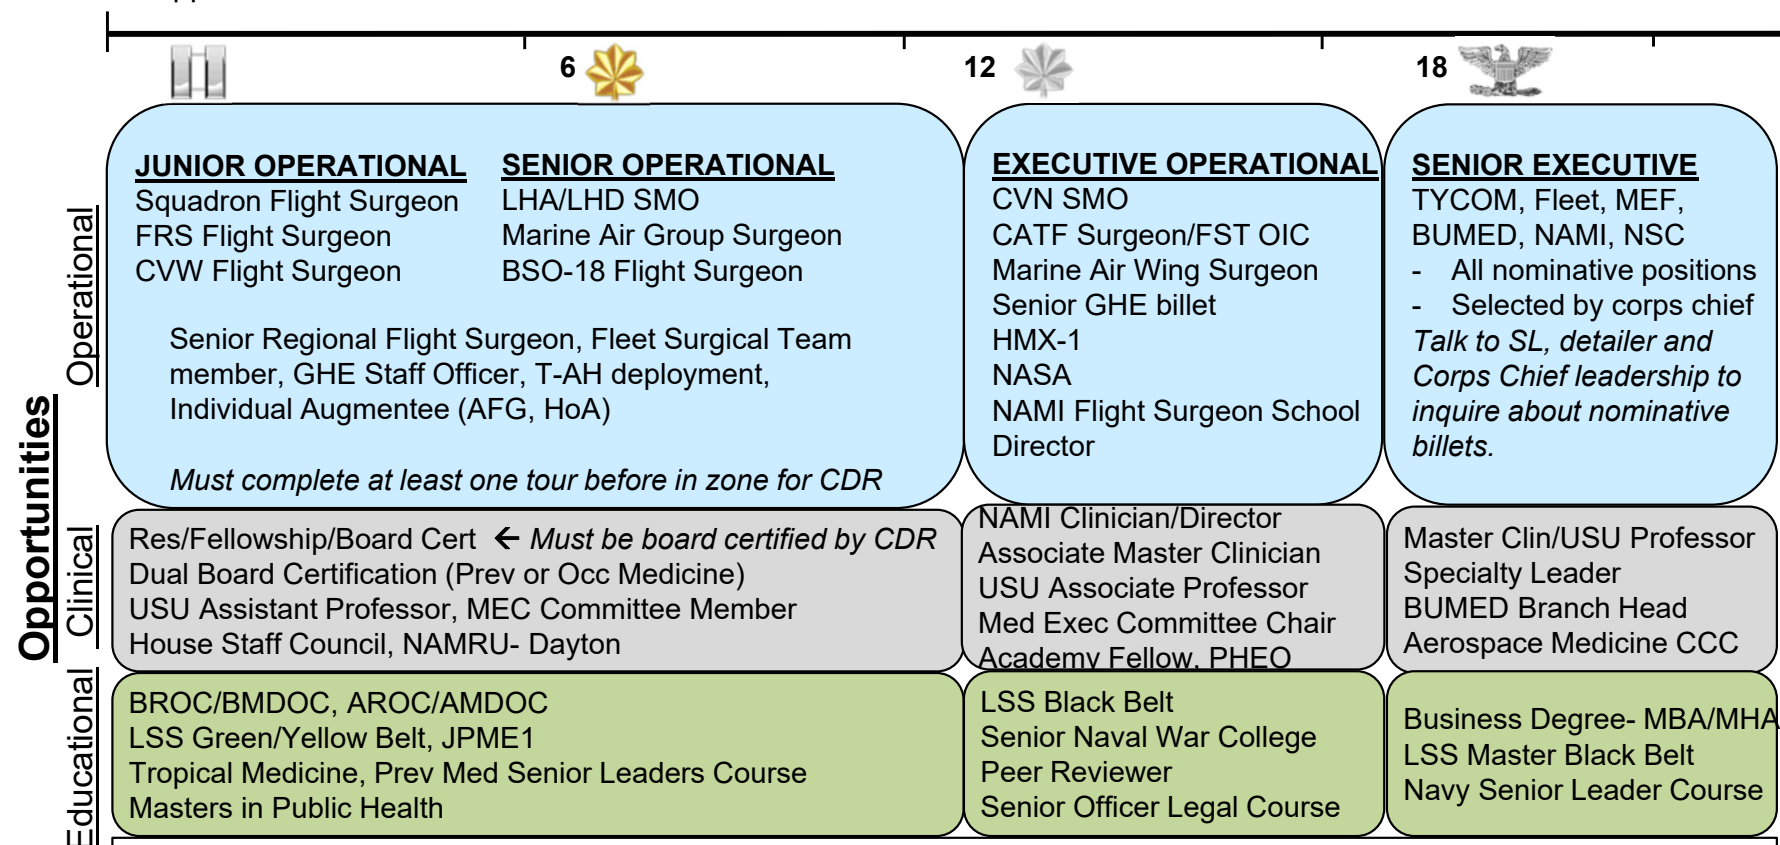

- Spec Leader caveats/concerns:
 - Long training (NSGY, CT Surg, vascular, OTO) who are competitively selected to go straight through may not be able to get operational time given need for case collection prior to oral boards. This may hamper their ability to select for CDR.
 - No consideration for “tracks” (educational, research).
 - Senior/Exec Operational billets may be unrecoverable for proceduralists. To be recoverable, billets must be close to MTF and/or agreement with line commander for TAD/moonlighting opportunities.

MC Aerospace Medicine Planner

Intent: The Navy MC Career Progression slide displays the larger leadership and promotional spectrum with an operational focus. This slide specifically addresses opportunities within the Aerospace Medicine career pathway and suitable operational billets.

Expectations: The career minded Navy Physician is expected to balance the demands of excellence as a physician against those of operational medicine leadership. Maintaining currency in the three domains listed below is optimal and requires intentional career management. The listed opportunities are illustrative but not exhaustive.

Operational Billets are central to career progression and to the development of operational competency. You should have completed at least one tour by the time you are in zone for CDR, if not more. A senior operational tour or exec operational tour should be in your record by the time you are in zone for CAPT. Executive Operational billets are increasingly nominative.

MTF Leadership demonstrates clinical expertise and leadership: Chairing committees, leading divisions, departments and directorates. The guidance above does not supplant but rather compliments demonstrating operational and clinical expertise.

Bottom Line: Keeping operational currency and relevancy will be critical moving forward to justify Navy Medicine in uniform.
